Nestled in the Heart of Perthshire

The castle was built in 1892 in the Scots Baronial style. Lt. Colonel George Glas Sandeman, grandson of the founder of George G. Sandeman Sons and Company Ltd, who were cotton merchants but rather better known as importers of wine, sherry and especially port from Spain and Portugal.

Sandeman bought the Estate in 1890. In 1905, the house and estate were inherited by Lt. Col. Sandeman's son, Captain George A. C. Sandeman. He was killed on the Western Front in 1915, during the First World War, and thus the property passed to a cousin. Between 1915 and 1918 the house served as a British Red Cross auxiliary hospital caring for wounded soldiers.

Fonab Castle remained a family home until 1946 when the property was sold to become the headquarters of the North of Scotland Hydro- Electric Board and was renamed Port-na-Craig House. The house overlooks Pitlochry Power Station, the last generation plant in the Board's Tummel Hydro-Electric Power Scheme, which was completed in 1962. The Board adapted the house to provide office accommodation and added further low-rise office buildings adjacent.

From 1971 the castle lay empty until 2013 when it was transformed into the luxurious Fonab Castle Hotel that you see today.
